PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL GENERATION

There have been several recent severe weather incidents which created the situation where there was insufficient electric generating capacity to cover customer demand in the Southwest Power Pool. Because of that, SPP raised the reserve requirement from 15% to 36% in the winter. If a utility does not have the required generation capacity it must pay a significant financial penalty to the Southwest Power Pool.

The Chanute electric municipal utility believes that it does have enough capacity to meet the new reserve requirement but it will be close. Because of new data centers the electric load in the Southwest Power Pool is growing significantly. It takes approximately five years to obtain the air permits from the EPA and obtain permission from Southwest Power Pool to build a new stand-alone electric utility generating plant. For example, KPP which is a collection from 20 Kansas cities has been trying to get authorization to build a new 56 MW plant in Winfield, Kansas. During those five years the estimated cost of construction for the new plant has gone from $90 million dollars to $180 million dollars. The cost per megawatt for that plant is now over $3 million dollars. Electric utilities are allowed to build up to 10 MW's of generation at existing power plant sites without having to go through a lengthy process like with a new stand-alone plant. The City has looked at multiple offers to add generation to the existing power plants. The Chanute electric utility has been pricing different generators for the last several years. City staff provided the City Commission with a PROFORMA quote for review. It is by far the best value that Chanute has seen. The total cost would be less than $300,000 a megawatt. The additional capacity can be sold to other utilities until it is needed to replace some of the current units that are aging out of service. Two 2 megawatt units at Plant 2 placed in service in 1965 and three of the units at Plant 3 were placed in service in 1986.

General discussion was made. Comments were made by City Manager Todd Newman, City Attorney David Brake, Director of Electric Utilities Brandon Westerman, and Chief Finance Officer Cory Kepley.

Motion made by Commission Taylor, seconded by Commissioner Berthot, to authorize the purchase of additional generation to protect the City from financial penalty if SPP raises reserve requirements again or Chanute has a failure with one of its aging generators. Voting Aye: All. Motion carried unanimously.
